A basic design consists of 2 parts, the data model and the control logic. The data model is a separate text file that describes the instructions that Quick Designer will read and assemble into the controller. These two files are linked together in Quick Designer. The control logic is another text file, and is linked to the data model. Most applications will have one data model file and one or more control logic files. A simple example I want to create a three-digit display. The display will be present on every line of the screen that I choose. I will choose to display the text at the top of the screen. The screen has three columns. I will choose two of those columns for my display. The third column I will leave empty. I start with the design by selecting the data model from the main menu. I then select the columns that I want to display 1cb139a0ed
