Rohingya Muslims celebrating Eid al-Adha in the jungle refugee camp, by Karta Das Karta Das of Sierra Leone writes about a new project to create a website about the Rohingya people in Sri Lanka and call for action to help Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh. 'Documented Voices: The Rohingya of Sri Lanka and Bangladesh' is a project by Digital Rights Foundation (DRF). It is an international initiative founded by five South Asian organisations working across India, Bangladesh, Myanmar, Malaysia, Indonesia and Sri Lanka. The core focus of the project was to document the stories of the Bangladeshi refugees and the Bangladesh government's response to the crisis of Rohingya refugees in Bangladesh. The work of the film industry and its experts is a great example of how we, like the rest of the world, are interested to know more about the Rohingya and the root causes of their plight. The Rohingya Muslim refugees are persecuted in Myanmar and Bangladesh, and are referred to as 'extremist Bengali' or 'Bengali militant Muslims' by the government and the media of both countries. Whilst the many images of the Rohingya refugee crisis have been on our screens on television and the internet, we heard about the reality on the ground through the stories of those who live there. In the Rohingya refugee camp in Bangladesh, the Buddhist monks and the families living there, hosted us for a couple of days. During the visit, we went to visit the Rohingya villages, and learnt about the lack of basic services, land ownership and the inability to access justice. Many in the village looked at us blankly; they live in constant fear of one of the new state-sponsored security militias in the country, and are now more fearful of the Bangladeshi state than the militant group, the Arakan Army. The areas that host the Rohingya of Myanmar are the most underdeveloped in the country. When the flight of refugees from Myanmar started, the Bangladeshi government set up a temporary settlement of around 1.3 million people in the southern coastal area. It created space for them to live in and for the authorities to buy their land. It is the government's policy to only take land that has been in the possession of the people for more than 50 years. Tensions between Muslims and Buddhists are high. Muslims were forced to leave their villages where they lived for more than seven generations, and have to live in crowded
