What happens if you load even 10 times more RAM than the maximum loading capacity? A: 4GB is the lowest RAM addressable size you can have in 32-bit mode. A single stick of DDR2 can be configured to hold up to 4GB or 8GB (or more) but you cannot load more than 4GB. A single stick of DDR3 (aka PC3-12800) can support up to 16GB. Q: How can I use Java 8 @Produces annotation with SpringBoot configuration? I am trying to use @Produces annotation with a SpringBoot configuration, but I don't find any reference to it. @RestController @RequestMapping("/api/v1") public class RestController { @PostMapping public Object call() { return "Hello, World!"; } } This is a plain SpringBoot configuration without any ServletContainerInitializer. In case there is no way to configure it, I would like to use JaxrsServerFactoryBean instead. A: If I understand you correctly, you want to configure spring-webflux, where you do not have a ServletContainerInitializer? There is a new SpringFramework-WebFlux package which tries to integrate WebFlux with existing servlet container functionality. Spring Framework - WebFlux However, you can do a lot of custom configuration with spring-webflux. The javadoc for the @RestController annotation states: Enable WebFlux support for your @RestController beans. This configuration requires a ServletContainerInitializer for WebFlux support. If a ServletContainerInitializer is not provided, only MethodInvokingHandlerAdapter is available at runtime. Which means, you would also need a ServletContainerInitial
