As the creator of Gunz, you have many titles to your name, including Gunz Online and Gunz X Online. With respect to Gunz, I have created battleships with the concept of creating your own unique battleship. In the battleship, you can build and edit your own ship. You can modify and create weapons, engine, systems, and a number of other parts. These parts can be equipped and customized through the point system. Players can work together to create the most lethal battleship. Brick Building is an FPS that is the culmination of Gunz. We expect brick building to surpass Gunz. Enjoy the game and have fun! A: I am still a bit confused as to whether you are making a new game or just remaking Gunz Online. If it's a remake, you can probably make your own server. However, note that remakes tend to be a very disjointed experience. If you are creating a new server, the only way is to build a new engine from the ground up. Q: How to get the first column (which is a date) from a query while inserting data into the table I have a table setup like the following. If I were to add the record for GDLF, I'd like to insert it into the table as follows. Id Name Description EffectiveDate EffectiveDate ----- 1 GDLF blah 2/15/2011 2/15/2011 1 row(s) affected. I was able to insert the record using the below SQL. INSERT INTO [dbo].[MyTable] ([Name], [Description], [EffectiveDate], [EffectiveDate]) VALUES ('GDLF', 'blah', '2/15/2011', '2/15/2011') However, I can't seem to figure out how to get the first column (which is the EffectiveDate) into the INSERT statement. A: 18.5.2.2

DEADLY CHAOS - Your journey to the distant future of Vierzo has just begun. Turn sideways and flee the flood of people rushing to and fro on their way to and from a troubled Earth. Hide in walled enclaves to escape the ravenous hordes. Are you in it for the long haul? The long, long haul? Or maybe you are just looking for a spot of savage fun? Do not underestimate the gravity of the local gravity. The power of local gravity is crushing your very bones! The gang of maniacs behind DEADLY CHAOS is out to stomp you into jelly. They need your lifeless body to serve their cause. If they capture you, you will be strapped into a living memory implant and you'll be forced to attend a great frat party (it's nothing short of a rave). DO NOT TURN AROUND OR LOOK BACK OR YOU WILL BECOME A PARTY ROOM WAREHOUSE FOR ALL THE WORLD! Welcome to Vierzo, the world of DEADLY CHAOS. You are one of only three living beings in a world where humanity is long extinct and a new regime has taken over. It's your job to make your way to Earth and save all remaining humans. You need to find a specialised bot to help you. A bot who is smart enough to guide you through the dangerous territory. You see, the gang behind DEADLY CHAOS, has a plan to retro-develop humanity in a simulated society. They will turn you into a human again and put you back into a time capsule. The gang have fitted you with an implant called The Law, which will make you a living memory forever! But their plan involves more. They want you to help to craft a large, genetically modified super-human agent called The Leader (AKA Supreme Leader or the Leaderbot). He will lead the maniacs in their quest for global domination of all the worlds of the Multiverse. You do not want to create him, but you have no choice! You can succeed and be resurrected. Or you can fail and stop existing. It's up to you... ### What's new in Edge Of Galaxy:

— Visualization by: Hope Hale (may.as) Transcription by: Megan McKenna Divya Nair Urusayi Ayukwa is a young farmer at the small farming community of Zoo in Uzbekistan's Wakhan Valley. His community (pop. 2,000) is right in the middle of this picture-perfect valley, atop a small plateau. To get here you would have to cross a 45-mile-long suspension bridge with no guardrails over the narrow canyon. Urbania is smaller than the farms around it. The cows are small, too, but the farmer has connections with Mongolian Kazakh herders who travel all the way in the rainy season to bring the cows up the mountains. He sells to a local man who buys bulk for export to Kazakhstan. "It's very, very humid here," says Mary Utey, a local tour guide and zoologist at Zoobotanical Gardens near the border. "It's a pretty small valley and it's very close to the mountains." Could farming sustain more of the planet with less farming? A new model shows it might be possible. Urbania The picturesque farm community sits on a small plateau. Mary Utey says it's right where the land drops off—the land is too steep to farm here. The valley drops some 600 meters (2,000 ft.) below the huge peaks around it. The community is a mix of mud brick houses and traditional mud huts for the herders, irrigated fields for wheat and barley, and a school (it looks a little like a toy school, but full of children). Aliment agriculture means agriculture of sufficient, localized food supply to support household and community members. Farmers here are part of the Central Asia New Market Agriculture Initiative (CANAMI), a non-profit farmer-education group working in the Khan Bashir region and funded by the Department of Agriculture in Turkmenistan (DAS). These early adopters are rethinking their agricultural practices to work together on a common, collaborative strategy. In Turkmenistan and across Central Asia, the region with the world's largest land area and a large population of nomadic subsistence farmers, the agricultural challenges are similar: low crop yields, severe soil erosion, and a rapidly-changing climate. Society changes as people are more dependent than ever on subsistence farming for a basic
