I am trying to get the $values array from the createProgram function and pass it into the fillProgram array Here is what I have so far... $array = array(); $values = mysql_fetch_array($result); $array = $values; //createProgram function createProgram(); //fillProgram function $values = $array; fillProgram($values); if(! ($query = mysql_query("UPDATE `programs` SET `title`='{ $values['title']}', `date`='{ $values['date']}', `price`='{ $values['price']}' WHERE `id`='{ $id}'")) echo "Error: ".mysql_error()." "; A: You can pass the values as an argument to a function like this: function fillProgram(&$values) { // do whatever you need to do } $values = array(); fillProgram($values); // $values is now your array. If your array is created within a function, you need to pass it by reference so that PHP doesn't just make a copy of the array: function createProgram($values) { // do something } $values = array(); createProgram($values); // $values is now the same as before. How to build a model with pandas that is more general than just the form of my data set? I want to build a logistic regression model which should be applied as a classifier where The class labels are merely arbitrary. The original data set is not descriptive enough. The only information needed is the data's data values. The problem is that I don't know how to make a model that is not only suitable for my data but also for any data I might receive in the future. Therefore I cannot use this model for classification. As of now my approach is to project the data into a numpy array, specify the algorithm and the parameters and then try to fit the model to this new array. The algorithm is scikit-learn's Lasso I don't know if this is a viable way to approach the problem. I also do not know how to save the best fit for future data, nor how it can be applied to classify a new data set. Is there a way to directly train a model based on data? Would that be a viable approach and if so, how can I save the best fit? Should I make a new question based on what I have thought about so far? A: In general yes, this is a viable approach. It is broadly the same process as standard machine learning except you're applying it to the properties of the input data instead of the model. You can use it to test your data. If it's not fitting, you know there is a problem with your data. As for saving the best fit, you can do that by setting a custom scorer to the estimator. Here's an example using lasso:

import numpy as np
from sklearn.linear_model import Lasso
generate some data
