Filamentous actin, one of the membrane proteins involved in receptor mediated endocytosis, associates with membranes in a cell-type specific manner. To understand the subcellular localization and membrane association of filamentous actin, chick ciliary epithelial cells were fractionated into cytoplasmic and membrane-associated fractions and the distribution of actin was examined by immunofluorescence. The results were compared to that of epithelial cells from other tissues, including a rabbit gastric gland, porcine thymus and mouse peritoneal macrophages. The fractionation protocol and the probe for actin (anti-actin antibody or FITC-conjugated phalloidin) were identical for all the cells studied. As previously reported in other cells, filamentous actin (F-actin) of the epithelial cells from the three tissues was exclusively associated with the membrane fraction. However, in contrast to epithelial cells of the three other tissues, some filamentous actin was also present in the cytoplasm of the ciliary epithelial cells. These data indicate that, in addition to its membrane
