Players can benefit from refined AI, and replays will feature more detailed, context-sensitive animations, more natural ball physics, and enhanced animations that accurately show the movement of players and balls. "Gameplay will be more fluid and respond to what the player does," said Aaron Amartuvong, gameplay programmer at EA Canada. "We will have more control over the ball, so when a player lays it off at pace, the ball will be in a more natural position to recover and the player will be easier to follow," added Amartuvong. The goalkeepers will also be more responsive, with improved ball-handling and increased situational awareness, but less recovery speed, especially at close range. "The most exciting thing is that the athletes in the game do not seem out of place," said Amartuvong. "The feel of the game is completely natural." This will be the first FIFA game to offer solo and co-op campaign modes. Solo mode creates a larger challenge by taking the system from scripted to unscripted, and will test the player's ability to make the most of their FIFA playbook in multiplayer. Co-op mode will add an extra layer of added challenge as it will require players to work together to overcome specific challenges. The return of FIFA Ultimate Team will also be a featured attraction in Fifa 22 Activation Code. This new mode will feature a curated collection of cards, which players can assemble into kits that can be customised through player appearances, kits, shorts and more. New to FIFA 22 are Blindfolded modes, including a Practice mode to help improve shot accuracy. Pro Pop Pass (formerly known as Fake Pass) will feature new technique options that allow players to swap positions when catching or shooting, as well as new mechanics to move defenders out of the way. The Technical Guide will feature breakdowns of the key points of footwork techniques, as well as shots taken, goals scored and assists created. FIFA Ultimate Team and Special Delivery will also make a comeback. The following are additional comments from Aaron Amartuvong, gameplay programmer: “All of us in EA Canada are excited about this project and our commitment to delivering the best FIFA game ever. We could not be more fortunate to have a talented team of like-minded people who work diligently every day to push the limits of innovation and technical
