Sometimes the solution is so simple... ..that it doesn't need to be said. The other day I went on a bike ride. The ride was long, almost an hour and a half. I rode from the back of the bike rental shop to the front of the bike rental shop, where it was my turn to pick up my bike. It was a point-to-point bike ride, which was good. I had a cool chance to think and ride without having to check the traffic, lane change, etc. It was great. What wasn't so great was that when I got to the front of the shop, I had to leave my bike to get a change of clothes. This meant that I had to have a four-block walk to my car, leaving me quite a distance behind my best friend, who was biking in the opposite direction. That means it was far enough behind her that she had to slow down at the red light to allow me to catch up. And that's when it hit me. As we both waited at the red light, I thought, "It's so funny, it feels like a different kind of bike ride when I'm finally catching up to her." We've done this before. Time after time. Why had I never thought of this? Not only was it funny, but it was

Smoking and the kidney. Smoking is an important determinant of the risk of developing kidney disease, even in non-diabetic people. Tobacco exposure is also associated with increased risk of cardiovascular disease. The clinical spectrum of the renal effects of smoking includes both the occurrence and the severity of glomerular disease and tubulointerstitial nephritis. Although the pathophysiologic mechanisms are not fully understood, oxidative stress is a major feature of the renal damage caused by the chemical constituents of tobacco smoke and their metabolites. Cigarette smoking is a major cause of chronic kidney disease, tubulointerstitial nephritis, and renal failure. Based on an individual's smoking history, the degree of smoking, and other medical risk factors, smoking cessation counseling can lower the risk of developing and of progressing to end-stage renal disease.Working Around The Problems In the field of Web Designing, font selection is an important aspect. Fonts are selected to match with the target audience of a website. The best font choice depends on the different languages, type sizes, illustrations and so on. Fonts are important, only when the same font is used throughout the website and it is well coded. Falling into the trap of using only one font to match with everything can be a bad choice. Using a single font for a website that is required to be used in multiple languages, fonts can be an issue. Many a times you can find a font that looks good on the screen of any browser of any platform. But when it comes to printing or submitting the work on paper, the font used on the web becomes so different from what is used for printing. Problem or Solution? There is more than just one problem with using a single font. Web pages on the Internet are intended to be viewed by people using different browsers and at different screen resolutions. Many a times designers expect the font to render the same way and look the same on all browsers. Because of this, they don't want to use a font from one browser, but instead want to pick a font that can render the same way in all browsers and devices. With that said, designers are quite right to find a way to use fonts that look good on screen and on paper. Unfortunately, there are lot of issues and problems when using a single font across a website. In a worst case scenario, when a web designer can't find a good looking font to use, one can end up resorting to copyright
