The second airline passenger to fall ill aboard a JetBlue flight has been hospitalized, according to the airline. The sick person, who was last reported to be in a hospital in New York, was on board the flight from New York's JFK Airport to South Florida. "We are sorry to confirm that a passenger who was aboard the flight from New York's JFK Airport to Fort Lauderdale on Tuesday, April 4th has become ill, and has been transported to a hospital. Our thoughts are with the passenger at this time," a JetBlue spokesperson said in an email to ABC News. "JetBlue is fully cooperating with all local authorities and is providing information to investigators and hospitals as required." The person who fell ill was last reported to be in stable condition, according to a statement from the New York City medical examiner's office. The person has not been publicly identified. The New York City medical examiner's office is continuing to investigate how the person became sick. The plane, a Boeing 737, made an emergency landing at Jacksonville International Airport in Florida. From the Federal Aviation Administration's Air Traffic Controllers Association: "A controller at Jacksonville International Airport (JAX) reported to the FAA Jacksonville Tower controller on approach when the aircraft landed and requested that tower restrict the runway use to be closed and instruct pilots to return to the airport. The pilots complied with the instructions and notified the tower that the runway was available for the aircraft to land." "Staff from the Jacksonville Aviation Authority and Jacksonville Fire and Rescue also responded to the scene. The airport was closed during the arrival and departure of the flight, causing
