When I run this, the file is "hardcoded" to encode and download to specific directory, rather than have it run and

A: In general, you don't want to call the utility itself, you want to use it as a subprocess from your scripts. First, you need to launch it with an argument, and you need to capture its output using `subprocess.check_output()`. You can then either terminate the process with this, or you can check whether the standard output is empty. Finally, if you want to automatically get the data, you can use a subprocess, and pass it a `poll()` loop, as long as you catch the `DataReceived` event. The `poll()` loop is documented in the man page under `POLLIN`, `POLLPRI`, `POLLHUP`. You can try something like this, `import subprocess ... # Start the process.`

p = subprocess.Popen( [subprocess.PIPE, '-i',
    'tarzan.avi', '-f','sample.avi', d0c515b9f4
