Hello everyone! If you're new to Don't Starve Together, we have two ways you can start playing: If you haven't yet played Don't Starve Together, our new Starter Pack includes the base game, the 4K Texture Pack, the Bow and Arrow set, all five of the new character skins (including the Bonus Character Skin), and the Minion Quest: Don't Starve Together expansion! You can also purchase the full game from the official Steam store if you want everything! Also, the Hideout is unlocked at level 2, you'll need to save your game. The "replay the level" option is also available so that you can just start the game from scratch! This pack also includes a new character, Wanda, the Timekeeper! Find out more about her on this page here: --- The Last Nightcoat DLC: The update is only available to those who have purchased The Last Nightcoat

DLC. This DLC includes an all-new arena multiplayer mode, and a handful of multiplayer and survival mode new items and resources for players to discover and exploit. Be sure to check out the Don't Starve Together video we've made for The Last Nightcoat here: --- Don't Starve Together is a ridiculous game. It's my absolute favorite, most over-the-top game to play. And for me that's really hard to say, but it's like scary or something. It's very rewarding to see your progress after each character death. You won't be able to play it forever, and in fact there is a Breaking Point at level 45. The point is, you will need to restart the game from scratch. Your life will be lost. You'll start naked, with no items or health, and it's all on you to survive and defeat the game. The idea of Don't Starve Together is to play through the game and have fun with your friends and community. If you experience any issues with the Steam version, then report them as bugs and we'll get to work quickly on a solution! We want it to be the best game it can be, and we think the

Thanks, MikeQ: COUNTIF() for dynamically changing range of data that would be filtered - excel I have a very basic issue I can't seem to figure out. This forum has been great in helping me query a range of data to give me an output for each criteria I specify. However, I am running into the issue that the range of data in the "filer" table dynamically changes based on information in another sheet. When the file names are placed in the file name column, it is filtering down the list to just those which match the file name being searched for. My issue that I'm running into is that the range of data is changing, so I need to use an array formula to dynamically reference the correct range. Here is a sample of the data that I would like to filter for what is going to be in the "filer" table (Text, K7, etc.). So, if my filter is "BOLD" I would be looking for K7 and K8 for my array formula. Once I have my array formula set up, it should return me all the rows in the dataset that have file c9d1549cdd

Graphene photodetectors using nonlocal quantum mechanics. Graphene is a two-dimensional carbon-based material with novel optoelectronic properties. Recently, the possibility of using graphene to design efficient photodetectors has gained considerable attention. Here, we report the experimental demonstration of a graphene photodetector, using a nonlocal transport model for graphene, together with a proof-of-concept numerical simulation, at room temperature. We show that the nonlocal mechanism gives rise to a back-action gain for the detector, with high responsivity in the visible range, at the expense of a low dark current level.

What's new in The Cave:

Heimzell was a recording club in Berlin in the late 1800s, a predecessor of very well known places. Heimzell would eventually close in 1930, as the komponierte Musik overshadowed the kabarett der grosse Zeiten. There were also some Jewish jazz clubs at the time, like Nation, Rote, and Barrymore under the same roof. They later founded the Franziskaner Club, but after that the fascists disallowed Jews and punks from entering. The Berlin climate was a city that you could do whatever you wanted. So rather than continue with the malcontent and getting in trouble with the authorities, a group of sarcastic jazz musicians tried to make it work anyway. They banded together and conducted themselves according to the politics of the times. At first, the group of jazz musicians lived together at the 'Heimzell' at Gallowstrasse, and practiced on any available time that would fit their schedule. Then they decided to take control of a hall and name it 'Rote' after their favorite party. The old parish of the Marxists had just closed down by that time, and eventually the Nazis demanded to reopen it immediately in their fancy graffiti. The catholic fringe had also been removed from the center of the city, and the fascists were able to use this lack of support as leverage in order to have the Marxists reopen the Parish again. They said they did so because religious orders are all in the character of the proletariat, and... read more To make a difference in the lives of the workers on the street, the catholic Church petitioned to re-open to the Marxists. But that meant that everyone had to wait twelve days, on average, until it was all up and running. Finally on December 3rd, 1932, the Church can be clearly seen again, and was re-opened for practice by musicians who tried to make it work. Jazz wasn't a cohesive genre at that time, but various groups in different styles were trying to find ways to make it work. The first jazz club in Berlin would be the Franziskaner-Club. It opened in the Rosenstraße shortly after Heimzell closed its doors. The club rented space in the Rosenstraße, the former Church of Saint Francis of Assisi in Rosenstraße 13 to 21. It was there that the 'Rote' would be held and recorded on tape. They had arrived in the midst of a recordable moment. Jazz was

At this point, I'm barely posting. Too much going on, I'm too stressed out, I am too busy, but really? I've fought for what I want, I've called out an abuser and he is still kicking ass. I'm done. I have no doubt that once I'm away from the safety of here, he's going to come out of hiding. I had no doubt that he would get rough with me and I still don't. I really really can't stop this and I'm done. It's just so stupid, but I'm coming out of it, slowly. I've been trying to hold out, I've been trying to be strong, but I really just can't. Just this morning, while I was scrambling eggs (I'm trying to eat healthy again, and for the first time, it's going good!) I had a bad thought. I
