A: I found a more simple solution, and it does not require any VB scripting knowledge. You can simply do it with a macro. A simple macro that would work would be: Sub KeyGen() Dim ctl As Control For Each ctl In ActiveDocument.ModelSpace.FrameSpace.Controls If ctl.Name.ToUpper() Like "CDSP-" Then ctl.Enabled = False End If Next ctl End Sub For some reason, it gets a little messy if you want to make sure it even runs for multiple levels, so just in case, I included a special case: Sub KeyGen() Dim ctl As Control For Each ctl In ActiveDocument.ModelSpace.FrameSpace.Controls If ctl.Name.ToUpper() Like "CDSP-" Then If ctl.Parent.Name.ToUpper() Like ".-PROCESSOR-" Then ctl.Enabled = False Else End If End If Next ctl End Sub I also had to put an addin at the top of my document, put the "Insert Addin" button and call the macro from there. A: Excel VBA is powerful but it does require some understanding of VBA, which requires time and energy. There are tools available that make VBA easier to use. VBAX is one of them and is available here for free. VBAX can be used to generate custom VBA procedures that do not require any reading or writing of Excel files. VBAX can also be used to generate custom functions, classes, forms and other files. If you want to generate a generalised keygen program, then you could check out the following papers Generating Command-Line Programs in C# Generating cross-platform keygen
