The program features an advanced recovery interface with a Windows form! | With a goal of making the game even more fun for the fans and players alike, the NBA is doubling down on the number of games they televise on network TV and launching a major new trend with the 2010-11 schedule. More games on TV means more money for the league, and thus more money for players. The Seattle SuperSonics, for instance, are a league-owned team, so players are not paid directly by the NBA, instead getting paid directly by the league. From a player's standpoint, more games on TV means more money. However, when the number of games on TV reaches a saturation point, at which point there are more games on TV than there are still games in the season to be played, attendance falls sharply. That is certainly the case in Pittsburgh. The SuperSonics played their first game in the city on Christmas Day at the Civic Arena and had 14 sell-outs in their first two seasons there. The Cubs also played a game there on Christmas Day and only had one sell-out.

Whatever the reason, the attendance this season for Pittsburgh games is one of the worst in the league. Pittsburgh's poor attendance has led to speculation that the SuperSonics are moving elsewhere. But that's not necessarily the case. There's a strong market for basketball in Pittsburgh with nearly 20 million residents. When the Canadian Olympic hockey team played in Pittsburgh, attendance was 30 percent higher than it was at Salt Lake City and Denver. Fans in Quebec support hockey so fiercely that there is no other team than the Montreal Canadiens. They are a market unto themselves. Those same fans are also passionate about pro soccer, and the Pittsburgh Riverhounds have been drawing well recently. There is a way to get more people to the games, in addition to making the games on TV more exciting. Banners, end zones, and ads draped across the length of the arena are all ways to engage fans at the game. The NBA has reported a record-breaking attendance in the first two weeks of the 2009-2010 season. In the opening week, the league's highest attendance was at 19,259 for the Miami Heat vs. the Detroit Pistons on Dec. 29, and the highest figure for a single game was 22
