Details on the technical improvements and new gameplay experiences that will be available to players on the game's release date, October 2, 2017, will be revealed later this year. Available to download today, with coverage on official Xbox One and PS4 channels, FIFA 22 will include the Women's World Cup™, UEFA Champions League, UEFA Europa League, international club competitions and national leagues for both club and country teams. The player's experience within the gameplay and online features of the game will be amplified and electrified by the enhanced presentation of enhanced artificial intelligence for both player controls and a suite of advanced animation and graphic improvements. “We are working to create the most authentic and compelling experiences possible for football players of all abilities,” said Fabio Cuevas, director of the FIFA franchise at EA Sports. “Alongside our new gameplay and technical innovations, the presentation has been re-imagined and the player model and animations have been improved to enable players to truly experience the full range of emotions. We’re committed to the highest standards of playability and realism, making FIFA the biggest and deepest football game on the market, for players of all skill levels.” FIFA 22 will support a range of popular game modes, including the return of Seasons, the Champions League and more. New FIFA Ultimate Team modes are also featured, offering the most in-depth and rewarding experience yet. For the first time, with FIFA Ultimate Team Online, fans can buy packs of players and cards and compete online against friends or the world. FIFA 22 will also feature the all-new connected GAMUT Experience. With features integrated into the core gameplay and presentation, the same moves, looks, styles and animations that look great on the console screen can appear seamlessly on television. Fan-favorite FIFA Ultimate Team cards and achievements can also be shared across all platforms. Early access to FIFA 22 will begin in August with a "MyClub" feature for FIFA Ultimate Team fans. Additional details on FIFA 22 will be revealed in the weeks ahead. Commenting on the news, FIFA CEO, Minoru Mineta, said: “FIFA is the leader in the football world, with an unparalleled social and emotional engagement, and we have the most passionate fans who demand more from us. FIFA 22 is the biggest update yet to the FIFA franchise, and offers the most immersive experience for players of all abilities. We are
