While in reality moments of extreme grief do occasionally occur, the player is faced with a choice of whether or not to view those moments as real or as fiction.

Because of the player's choice, the game ends abruptly. Tears is a 2.5D action game where you control a player character who witnesses the death of a loved one. A ghost-like reflection of the dead person reappears, which remains as a ghostly apparition in the room. The player can reach out and touch the reflection's hand or head. He or she can pull out some of the hair from the reflection's head, but that will harm him/herself, and the reflection will appear again, wiping out what hair was removed. Players often forget that they are the one inside. A cold reaction to the apparition will trigger special moments from the player's past. These moments trigger flashbacks. The player can control the outcome of these flashbacks by how he/she chooses to act. Even if this results in feelings of anger, depression, and sadness, the player is given the choice to accept it or see the reality of it as a fiction. Even if a player forgets that they're in control, they may come to hold opinions of themselves that will be changed by how they act in the game. By the end of the player's journey, they will either choose to see the reflection as a fiction, letting the game end in an ordinary fashion, or to accept its existence as real. In the latter case, the player will encounter a variety of special elements called Tears. Tears are the constant presence of the dead, and can be created by the reflection itself or by the apparitions of other ghosts. Tears that naturally occur have elements to

RIAA Wants Google, Amazon to Pay for Piracy If you think that the music industry is cracking down on piracy, think again. Just recently the recording industry unveiled their request for the payment of $250 per infringer. According to TorrentFreak, the Recording Industry Association of America (RIAA) and five of its members plan to file a federal lawsuit against the two big players in the world of internet sales, Google and Amazon. The RIAA want Google and Amazon to be obligated to take swift action to reduce their caches of available pirated materials. The RIAA claims that they want protection as well as damages and attorneys fees for every single infringing file they find on the two giant websites. Many people that we have spoken to, claim that these two giants do not have a problem of pirating content, rather they just do not want to take the effort to block it. This is one of the arguments that the RIAA hopes that they can continue to force Google and Amazon to take action. They argue that the two sites do not use any filtering technology for the provided digital material. As previously reported online, Google has been hit with an RIAA subpoena back in June of 2008. The recording industry has suffered an estimated $80 billion annual loss due to the existence and distribution of pirated music. This figure is expected to be passed on to the public soon. The three major record companies are also calling on Google to remove copyrighted files faster and remove illegal

Angiomas of the parotid region are rare lesions and only a few cases of such lesions are reported. We present two cases of parotid angiomas. The first case presented as a swelling and pain in the right parotid region, with the age at onset being 20 years. The computed tomographic scan and magnetic resonance imaging of the lesion showed hypervascularity of the parotid mass. The second case presented with a complaint of difficulty in swallowing. The computed tomographic scan and magnetic resonance imaging revealed a cystic mass in the right parotid region. We believe that angiomas of the parotid gland should be considered in the differential diagnosis of lesions of this region. The successful treatment of such cases is surgical excision.
