The program EEGprocessing is an electronic tool that is especially designed to generate, investigate and interpret power spectra of electroencephalographic signals, and to perform correlation-analysis. This program can be run on a PC under MS-DOS or using the Linux-operating system. The power spectra can be calculated using a fast Fourier transformation, and are optionally modified by two subsequent filters, or Fourier transformation after windowing. The examination of the result can be performed by scrolling on the signal, or can be conducted by means of an automatic display window. If deviations or specific localizations are to be investigated, correlation-analysis can be performed by changing the window size to evaluate the activated areas. The program is presented in four chapters with different purposes and examples (for novice, intermediate and expert). Apart from the main window where the options and controls are located, the text or graphics of which can be changed, there is a sub-window with the outcome of different analyses performed for the last step.
