The idea is to provide a simple front-end web application which reads the data in a plaintext file, and then generates an audio file which can be played back in a web browser (with audio HTML tags). So the flow would be as follows: User types in data into a textarea, usually a few hundred rows of text User presses 'Generate' button, which runs a backend server The backend server iterates over the data to check for special data (like a repeated sequence of single-char codes such as '*', ':', ' ', and so on, or special 'begin' and 'end' codes) and then generates appropriate notes. The user is shown a list of note-titles and assigned notes, and can then download the audio file I have found 3 services that can be used for this purpose: (not sure of the exact URL) (My personal favourite)
