Adding Spot Color to Color Balance If you've read through all the preceding chapters, you know that color balances are good for making colors in an image true to the colors in the original picture. If a photo in your library is a little too green, for example, you can add a tad of blue and the problem goes away. You can easily add color balance to an image as well. The way it works is fairly simple: 1. Click the Adjustments tab. The Adjustments panel's Adjust Color tab opens. 2. Click the Spot Color icon in the Color button area (it's the square you see in Figure 4-3). The Color Picker that appears enables you to choose a color to add to the image. You can add as many colors as you want to color balance a photo. 3. In the Color box, type the desired color. The RGB box shows a color sample you can copy and paste. 4. Click the OK button. FIGURE 4-3: After clicking the Add button, choose a color. Color balance is a great way to clean up a photo. I often use it to lighten a photo that's been overexposed (the next section explains overexposure). But if you've been given a photo in a digital format, you have all the colors and intensity you want already.

Dropbox is a file hosting service that allows you to store your images online, so they'll be available to all your computers and mobile devices. It's not easy to find a solution that works as well as Windows Live Photo Gallery, but I've found two plugins that work well: Free (for personal use only): Windows Live Photo Gallery isn't available for Mac, but you can easily import pictures from a Dropbox account and you can easily remove unwanted elements (such as logo, watermarks and borders). All you need to do is login to your Dropbox account from the Photos tab and select the folder where you want to import images. You'll see a window like this (you can do the same from any folder you want): And you're done: Windows Live Photo Gallery — Photo Files Windows Live Photo Gallery — Color & B&W Photo Files Photo Management with Windows Live Photo Gallery Copy and Paste Images Copy and paste images from your computer to the clipboard and paste them to your computer, photos, albums, videos and more. Picosecond pulse generation by supercontinuum generation in photonic crystal fibers. We present a short pulse generator on the basis of femtosecond pulses from a chirped-pulse-amplification system and picosecond pulses from a supercontinuum laser system in photonic crystal fibers (PCFs). These pulses were temporally overlapped to generate a picosecond pulse train. The characteristics of the pulse generator were investigated with respect to the dependence on the pulse energies of the femtosecond and picosecond pulses. The maximum pulse energy of the train was calculated as less than 1.8  $\mu\text{J}$ .

2013 SEMIFinalist Association of Southeast Asian Museums In September 2012, the Association of Southeast Asian Museums (ASEAM) announced the finalists of the 2013 SOCAR Security Programme for Southeast Asian Museums (SEMIFINALISTS), a programme designed to help Southeast Asian museums protect their collections. The second year of the programme involves a consortium of 14 museums from eleven Asian countries. A total of 16 exhibitions will be awarded one of the two prizes during the third week of September. The winners will receive their prizes at an awards ceremony in Singapore, while the second prize winners will receive an invitation to an exhibition in Singapore.

[Morphological characteristics of congenital aplasia of the lacrimal duct]. Aplasia of the lacrimal duct was detected in the nasolacrimal system of the right eye in a 27-year-old man. Histological examination of the lacrimal drainage system showed that this was a primary dystrophic lesion of the lacrimal drainage system, which produced lacrimal drainage obstruction. Aplasia of the nasolacrimal system occurs very rarely,

Sporadic genetic mutations can result in death or serious illness. For example, patients with primary immunodeficiencies, such as common variable immune deficiency (CVID), manifest with various disorders, including, but not limited to, recurrent sinopulmonary infections, autoimmune disease, skin and mucosa ulcers, iron deficiency anemia, and autoimmune pancreatitis. The underlying causes of sporadic genetic mutations causing disease are almost entirely unknown. CVID is a severe primary immunodeficiency involving defective or dysfunctional B cell and/or T cell function (U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,747,670; 5,731,275; 5,705,797; 7,822,726; and 7,982,890). CVID is characterized by a profound hypogammaglobulinemia, reduced serum IgM, recurrent sinopulmonary infections, autoimmune cytopenias, and gastrointestinal and/or liver disease. Although the precise incidence of CVID is unknown, a recent analysis of a large US population reported that CVID affected 2.1 cases per 100,000 persons (9). Since CVID affects a small fraction of the general population, it is likely that this incidence represents the upper limit of its prevalence in the United States. A large majority of cases of CVID exhibit CD19+IgD-CD27- B-lymphocyte deficiency. Recent advances in the understanding of the pathogenesis of CVID have identified the defect as residing within the B cell itself. The B cell defect is accompanied by aberrant T cell receptor signaling in the T cell and an increase in apoptotic T cells. These T cell changes reflect a degree of marginal zone lymphopenia, decreased repertoire diversity in the T cell compartment, and increased numbers of autoreactive T cells. Efforts to treat B cell deficiency and autoimmune manifestations have met with limited success. Due to the deficiency in lymphocyte development and function, B cells of CVID patients have been shown to be incapable of class switching and thus incapable of producing IgG, IgA, or IgE. Current treatment with intravenous IgG or subcutaneous IgG has shown limited success in the treatment of B cell deficiency and associated conditions. Since most patients with CVID are over the age of 10 years and therefore not a good candidate for this therapy, this treatment is largely limited to those younger than that. Additionally, intravenous IgG has been found to carry a significant risk of
